ROMSEY, ST MARY & ST ETHELFLAEDA

Rationale – by Tim Sledge, Vicar

1. The reason that the parish want to acquire the item is that we believe that it adds to the liturgy and the experience in the abbey. Firstly liturgically, Romsey Abbey was famed for its processions both of the nuns and the processional Royal routes. The nuns would process through the Nuns Doorway which is to the left of the proposed sighting of the Ethelflaeda diptych.
2. Secondly, it is a way of telling the story of the Benedictine history of the Abbey. Up to now, all we have are the legends of Ethelflaeda and the tombstones of four of the Abbesses. This visual representation adds to the history, and enables visitors and worshippers enter more deeply into the pattern of life and prayer of the Abbey then and now.
3. We have a rich and varied iconography of our other patron saint, the Blessed Virgin Mary, with a significant Martin Travers relief above the high altar. This Chris Gollon piece is the first and only significant piece of artwork of Ethelflaeda by one of the country's foremost artists, and has been painted specially for that space to blend in with the colours and surroundings of the blind arcading.
4. Each October at our Patronal festival we process down the south aisle to the chapel of Ethelflaeda and already we have plans to make this painting a station for prayer and devotion and reading of the Benedictine rule.

Fixing the painting

We still need to look into how the paintings would be permanently hung but I would consider small brackets at the top and bottom of the pieces. In addition we have CCTV in that area of the abbey and so could see any potential burglars. The painting is currently hung by wire on existing nails.

Dipytch of Ethelflaeda by Christopher Gollon

Established British artist , born London 1953

Background

Gollon has enjoyed many solo museum exhibitions in the UK, major museum acquisitions and public commissions. He has exhibited at Art Chicago and also with Yoko Ono, David Bowie and Gavin Turk in ROOT, a crossover exhibition of contemporary music and art created by Thurston Moore of Sonic Youth, at Chisenhale Gallery, London.

The “St Ethelflaeda “ diptych was painted especially for Romsey Abbey and for Chris’ exhibition there in 2016 and is intended to be a spiritual enhancement to the beauty of the Abbey. Chris Gollon painted “St Ethelflaeda “ specifically to fit physically and artistically into the blind arches of the wall by the Abbesses’ Door.

The painting invites the observer to reflect on the life of a nun, an abbess, a woman who lived and worshipped at Romsey Abbey. The painting encourages spiritual reflection on the people of “this place”, which then extends outwardly to all who share the Christian faith. It encourages us to stand, stare and consider our faith and our response to what we believe and is a tangible tribute to a person of great faith who demonstrated that faith through her love for God and for the people she served.

Another of Chris's religiously inspired paintings is the "Fourteen Stations of the Cross" which are permanently installed in the Grade One listed church of St John on Bethnal Green, designed by Sir John Soane. This set of 14 paintings were blessed by The Rt Revd Richard Chartres, Bishop of London and upon installation were critically acclaimed and chosen as Critic's Choice in the Financial Times by Jackie Wullschlager and in The Times by art critic Rachel Campbell-Johnston. The set of paintings has attracted much press interest which has resulted in an increase of visitor numbers at this London church.

Chris's religious painting has a very solid base in European art history, both drawing on the past but also bringing in new ways of seeing. His work seems both old and very new. The experience with the national touring exhibition has been that his paintings make the secular public see afresh and are drawn to the Biblical narrative; whilst at the same time giving the clergy a new expression for their faith and the conversations and enthusiasm the artist has been met with at every religious space have been quite wonderful.

Chris Gollon

His work is attracting increasing acclaim in the national press and specialist arts press: Financial Times, The Times, The Guardian, Aesthetica, BBC Radio 4, BBC1 News, and Alan Yentob's BBC1 programme Imagine. His film collaboration with JABOD, entitled Kaleidomorphism One, was premiered in London at the East End Film Festival (2008).

Novelist Sara Maitland's book Stations of the Cross (Continuum, London & New York 2009) was wholly inspired by and features Gollon's 14 paintings of the Stations of the Cross, which were commissioned by the Church of England for a Sir John Soane church in East London.

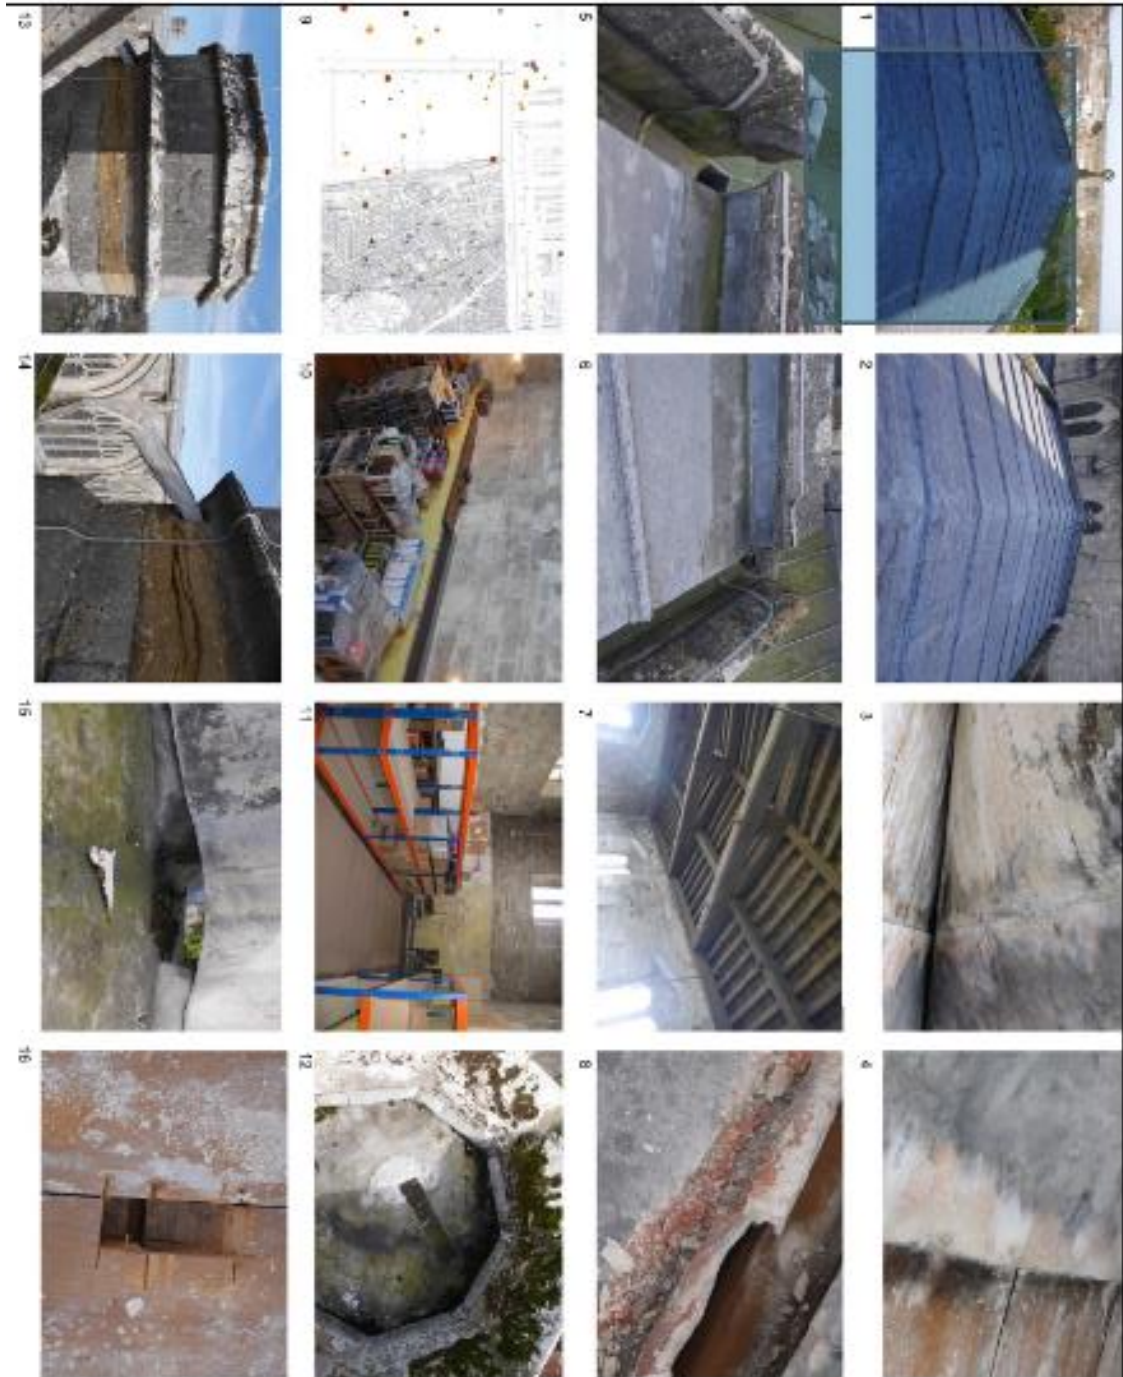

Chris Gollon was both First Artist in Residence and Fellow of the Institute of Advanced Study (2009), Durham University, and accepted an invitation to return as Artist in Residence at St Mary's College Apr-Jun 2011.

Chris Gollon: Humanity in Art by art historian Tamsin Pickeral (Hyde & Hughes) was published in 2010, endorsed by Bill Bryson OBE. In 2011, one of his Gollon's paintings was used as part of the story in the Hollywood film Twilight: Breaking Dawn (I). In 2012, The Art of Chris Gollon application for iPads launched worldwide. Chris Gollon is currently working on a series of paintings for a tour of British cathedrals in collaboration with award-winning novelist Sara Maitland.
